A JOURNEY THROUGHOUT ITALIAN LIFESTYLE

“Every architecture is an interior”

Within the design arts, every project is an interior, or, to be more exact, it is the design of a place that is always contained within another and so on, until the end of the Universe of which we know what contains but cannot know what is beyond it.

Without needing to evoke concepts at the edge of knowledge in the realms of physics and astronomy, we can recognize that there is a scale within architecture in which a space – like the apartment where we live – is nothing but a section within a building, and that the building is nothing other than a section within a block and that the block is within a neighborhood and so on through to the scale of the city and the landscape. This is why, in terms of vision, there is no distinction between architecture and interior architecture. Though it is useful to define a dimension of home living and quality of life that considers home settings on the micro-dimension scale of the object and the home, these considerations naturally have to relate to phenomena and behavior of those who live in the city in terms of a macro analysis of urban systems.

Macro and micro are categories of size that can now be completely superimposed and interconnected. We need only consider the tool through which we design – the mouse – which lets us zoom, i.e. observe, describe, and draw at once, the infinitely small and the infinitely large.

If it is true that architecture is art, it cannot recognize, any dimensional or instrumental bounds to expressing itself. As an art, it is in contrast to the professional specializations that separate the action from the thought, the solution from the vision, and the juxtaposition of objects and forms from their composition.

In our cultural heritage, both Michelangelo and Le Corbusier were sculptors, painters, architects, interior designers, lighting specialists, and even writers and poets. We can hardly accept the idea that there could be design realms that are only considered part of one professional scope (such as interior decorator, landscape designer, lighting designer, and so on) that does not need a global vision of the home.

Home living is increasingly complex and therefore specialized, and a corresponding need for that to be reflected in hybrid spaces where global and local mix. There is an interweaving and alternating of large and small, real and virtual. In a world we hope will overcome barriers and divisions, the need is felt more pressingly than ever.

the answer

BI.CI. makes your

OPEN SPACES TO DREAM IN

Breaking down physical walls opens up the imagination and lets us recreate a space according to our needs and desires. Open spaces are the perfect solution if you want fluidity in functions and aesthetic consistency in a constant dialogue between the living, kitchen, bedroom, and wellness areas. Colors become more organic and intense, while the materials range from ultra-fine to artisanal. Green and light pierce the spaces with a freedom of spirit that shapes everyday life.

PENTHOUSE WITH A VIEW

The ideal setting for conceptual experiments, penthouses are where limits are erased and styles merge as materials interact and interweave. Industrial flair and pure lines are paired with minimalist aesthetic choices in a concept of multidisciplinary design. No interferences, no unnecessary additions for objects and furnishings that make an impact and stand the test of time.

COUNTRY HOME

The home is a place to relax and spend time with your family, where we bring together the strands of our lives and reinforce ourselves. Delicate hues, graceful material combinations, spare lines and purity merge in a harmonious balance between innovation, memory, and new trends. Iconic pieces and fine finishes are lit up by sweet textures in spaces where you can take refuge or open up to the world of your closest friendships.

MATERIALS

MARBLE

The quintessence of the finest nature has to offer, with its luminous touch it brightens kitchens, tables, walls, and accessories. Marble is expressed in boundless variations created through sophisticated treatments. New technologies and three-dimensional designs join in excellence.

WOOD

An emblem of nature and warmth and material richness, wood has always been part of the home. Whether in wainscoting or furnishing, coverings, or details, wood's incredible versatility ensures always impeccable results.

GLASS

Though glass's origins are age-old, its feel is modern, making it among the undisputed stars of interiors and exteriors. Transparent, clear or matte, colored as we like, and in endless forms, it is a primary element part of excellent design.

STONEWARE

Porcelain stoneware is multi-faceted and flexible in its finishes and dimensions, rendering it a universal surface for architecture. Strong, thin, and elegant even in large sizes, it makes original, contemporary architectural solutions possible.

RESIN

Resin surfaces combine metropolitan flair and a material effect, making for ultra-stylish interiors. Play with bold colors or minimalist chic finishes.

WALLPAPER

More than just covering, wallpaper enhances each space and its particular uniqueness. Our wallpapers have a powerful artistic spirit, made by artists from different backgrounds, carefully devised to add a unique touch to interiors. Saturated colors, graphic effects, and subtle references to nature combine with contemporary furnishings.

LANDSCAPE

Open to the space, breathe, and get back into primordial contact with nature. B.I.C.I. reinvents outdoor spaces in a dynamic and interconnected relationship with the architectural design. More than just a garden, it becomes a green refuge that invites us to relax and enjoy ourselves.

The design of green space and the meticulous choice of decorative components create a setting in perfect balance between privacy and hospitality.

FURNISHING

The room no longer has walls and the ceiling becomes the sky as the home opens to new domestic landscapes. Outdoors are the new places for home living, where the bounds between indoors and outdoors are crossed with the ease of a step. The regenerating power of nature is the key to unwinding every day surrounded by things of utter beauty. Featuring sleek, simple designs, outdoor sofas, armchairs, sunbeds, tables and accessories become the key features of the outdoor space in an osmosis of style between indoors and out.

LIGHTING

Romantic lanterns or spotlights create soft lighting. Outdoor furnishing design is completed with the right choice of lighting fixtures. Nothing is more pleasurable than letting ourselves be transported by the evocative power of lights and shadow and barely suggested forms emerging from the dark.
